"A Lot of Gutsy Kids"

Twenty years ago, Nazareth scored its first lacrosse national championship

by Joe Seil

The chain-link fence that encased Hobart's Boswell Field was about four feet high and had all the efficiency of a roll of tissue paper in a rainstorm.

When Nazareth's Marty Kelly '92 unleashed the shot that enabled the Golden Flyers to beat Hobart—for the first and only time ever—in May 1992, the fence was simply no obstacle for the cascade of fans that poured onto the field to celebrate one of college lacrosse's most epic victories.

"I don't know if people realize the size of the mountain that we had to climb," recalls Brian Silcott, a midfielder for the Golden Flyers at the time. "It's something that could probably never happen again."

More than two decades have elapsed since Nazareth lacrosse's version of David slaying Goliath played out in front of more than 7,000 spectators. For most of the 34 players and five coaches who represented the Golden Flyers that day, memories of collegiate life have faded. The recollections, however, of Nazareth's 13-12 overtime victory over Hobart in the national semifinals—as well as those from a 22-11 romp over Roanoke in the national championship game a week later—are as vivid as hi-def.

As an upstart team with an ambitious head coach (Scott Nelson), Nazareth was in just its seventh season of intercollegiate play when it captured the Division III national championship in men's lacrosse, halting an unprecedented reign of success for Hobart that featured 12 straight national titles. Nazareth finished with a 14-1 record and was the best team in 1992.

"[Beating Hobart] was just one link in the chain," says Ronnie Davis '93, a midfielder who scored 32 goals that season, including six in the championship game against Roanoke. "We knew that the road to the championship would have to go through Geneva, but that was just one game."

Calling it "just another game" was a classic understatement. Supremely prepared and feeling as though their time had finally arrived, Nazareth secured leads of 6-0 and 8-1 before Hobart rallied. The Statesmen closed to within 8-3 by halftime; with 15 minutes to go, Nazareth's lead had shrunk to 9-6.

With less than a minute remaining, Nazareth was still up 12-10, but Hobart scored twice in the final 34 seconds, including the game-tying goal with just three seconds left, to force the game to sudden-death overtime. If it seemed like déjà vu all over again, it was because Hobart had beaten Nazareth eight times previously, including a last-minute 13-12 triumph during the regular season only a month before.

"I just remember being mad that we had allowed them to tie it up," says Kelly, who remained confident as overtime loomed. "I remember thinking that we couldn't let this happen again."

Bottom: Nazareth captures the 1992 Division III national championship in men's lacrosse.

And they didn't. Silcott won the crucial overtime face-off and passed the ball to Davis, who had doubts about passing the ball again. "Before overtime," Davis recalls, "Nelson told us to get the ball to Marty when we won the face-off. It crossed my mind, though, not to pass it."

Davis followed instructions, but Kelly had the ball wrap-checked from his stick by a Hobart defender as he tried to bull his way toward the goal. Miraculously, the ball bounced in front of Kelly and he was able to rake it back into the pocket of his stick. With the Hobart defender draped on him like a wet blanket, Kelly delivered the game-winning shot that settled into the back of the net, 24 seconds into overtime, touching off a victory celebration that lasted more than 20 minutes.

"The first face I saw was Ronnie's," Kelly says. "I never saw the wave of fans, but I ended up on the bottom of the pile and I thought my head might explode."

A week later, in somewhat anti-climactic style, the Golden Flyers completed their mission by dominating Roanoke for the national title in front of more than 6,700 fans at Philadelphia's Franklin Field. It was Nazareth's first of three national titles in the '90s. Hobart, meanwhile, moved up to Division I after the 1994 season, and the teams haven't played since.

"We were kind of a ragtag operation when you think back on it," says Nelson, now the head lacrosse coach at Binghamton University, "but we had a lot of gutsy kids."

More than two decades later, the players and coaches—now mostly 40-somethings—have scattered. Some played professionally both indoors and out. Some followed in Nelson's footsteps and became coaches. Still others haven't touched a lacrosse stick since. Most are married with children.

"It will always be part of my day-to-day being," says Davis, who lives in Pittsford and owns a handful of area eateries. "The best part of the whole thing is the friendships. It seems like there will always be a link to it."

With the landscape of present-day collegiate lacrosse somewhat altered—more than 200 teams compete at the Division III level alone—it seems unlikely that such a fledgling team could reap the same success in such a short period. "I guess it's possible, but not realistic," says Kelly, now the head coach at Roger Williams University in Rhode Island. "There's just too much parity."

Meanwhile, Nazareth's '92 team (along with its championship counterparts of '96 and '97) remains the standard by which others will be scrutinized. "It was quite a feat," says Nelson. "Those guys and the guys from the first few years laid quite a foundation."

THE ROAD TO A NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP SEASON

With about 30 seconds left in the championship game, lacrosse coach Scott Nelson was finally feeling at ease. The players were reaching for the water cooler as Nelson knelt down to watch the last few seconds tick away. The countdown began: ten, nine, eight, . . . SPLASH!

Nelson was an easy target for the cool cascade of icy water which culminated a dream season for the Nazareth College Golden Flyers in men's lacrosse.

"When the water hit me," Nelson said afterward, "that's when I finally felt comfortable."

It took a cold shower to wash away all the anxiety Nelson felt in building the Nazareth College lacrosse program from ground zero to a national championship in just seven years.

"I think it would have been much easier playing than coaching," he said. "It was incredibly nerve-racking."

In a seven-day span in May, the Golden Flyers closed the book on the unparalleled dominance of Hobart College and one of the most incredible dynasties in the history of college sports, and then opened a chapter of their own as they claimed the NCAA Division III championship by defeating Roanoke (Va.) College, 22-11, on May 24 at Philadelphia's Franklin Field.

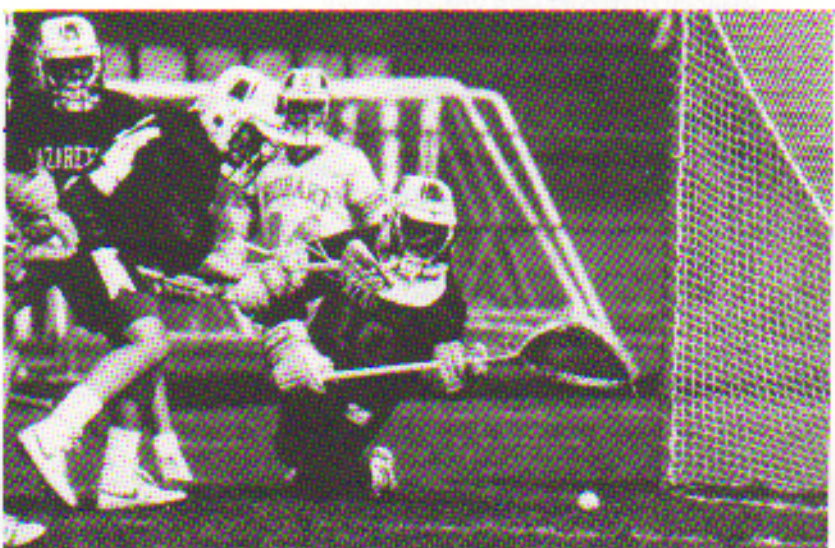

Despite the resounding championship game triumph, the moment that Nazareth lacrosse followers will most fondly remember is the Golden Flyers' heartstopping 13-12 overtime victory at Hobart May 17, bringing to a grinding halt Hobart's 12-year reign as kings of Division III lacrosse.

Senior attackman and three-time All-American Marty Kelly was the triggerman as he fired the shot heard around the lacrosse world at the 24-second mark of the sudden-death overtime. The shot found the back of the Hobart net and activated a wild celebration as scores of Nazareth fans poured onto Hobart's Boswell Field, and several minutes elapsed before all the hugging and backslapping was diffused.

"The Hobart win meant everything we've worked for for the last seven years," said Nelson. "Let's face it, if you're going to win the Division III lacrosse title, you have to go through Hobart. It was a victory for the entire Nazareth community -- from the players to the students to the parents, alumni and friends."

Still much of the credit for Nazareth's rapid rise to the pinnacle of Division III lacrosse should go to Nelson, who was selected in 1985 to undertake the monumental task of building a competitive lacrosse program at Nazareth.

It took one year for the Golden Flyers to turn out a winning record as they finished 8-3 in their first season. Two years later, in 1988, Nazareth reached national prominence by being selected to compete in the NCAA Division III playoffs.

Nelson's diligent work ethic has produced 28 All-Americans over the last five seasons, and an overall record of 75-24, including a 1992 mark of 14-1.

To win the national title, Nazareth completed the regular season 11-1, then disposed of Clarkson, 22-11, in the first round of playoffs. Hobart came next in a semifinal rematch in front of more than 7,300 fans in Geneva.

Nazareth had leads of 6-0 and 8-1, before Hobart rallied to tie the game, 12-12, at the end of regulation.

Brian Silcott won the overtime faceoff, passed the ball to Ronnie Davis, who relayed it to Kelly, who began working his way closer to the goal. Kelly slipped, lost possession momentarily, then scooped up the loose ball with his back to goal. In one historic moment, he turned, fired, and SCORED the winning goal.

The following week before 6,700 fans in Philadelphia, Nazareth met Roanoke again, and Davis scored six goals and added three assists to earn most valuable player honors and Division III Player of the Year. Greg Gebhardt made 19 saves in goal to lead a 22-11 victory, convincingly adding the exclamation point to a storybook season.

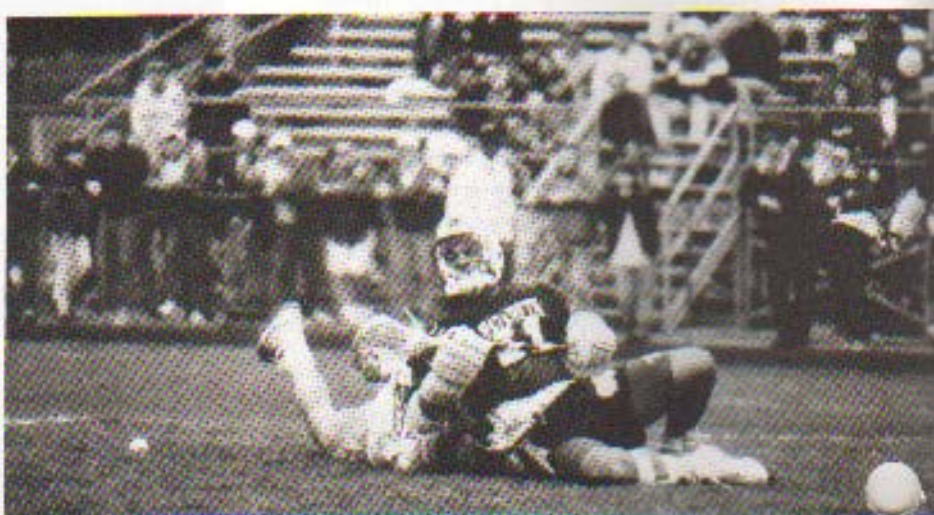

Davis, Gebhardt and Kelly later joined six other Nazareth players as All-Americans. The others were defensemen Dave Pratt (first team), Joe Alden (second team), and Pete Riley (second team), and midfielders Brian Silcott (second team), Cam Bomberly (third team), and Carl Jutzin (third team).

Marty Kelly's unassisted goal lifted Nazareth to a 13-12 overtime win over Hobart.

The Golden Flyers celebrate a goal in last year's championship game.

Midfielder Brian Silcott was one of nine All-Americans for the Golden Flyers in 1992.
